

Control Overemployment and Moonlighting Special Report

Controlling moonlighting is more effective than seeking to ban it outright.

With remote work becoming the norm, workers are taking on more than one full-time job. Over 80% of remote workers admitted to having multiple full-time jobs. The fatigue that builds up when employees work 60 to 70 hours a week inevitably erodes employee performance and productivity.

Key question: What should you do about moonlighting and overemployment? Here's how to decide on a strategy and create an effective HR policy to implement it.