

Labour Relations – Know The Laws Of Your Province

Discrimination regulations are vital for promoting fairness, safety, and dignity in the workplace. These regulations require employers to ensure that individuals are treated equitably in hiring, employment, and workplace practices, regardless of race, gender, disability, or other protected grounds. Measures include providing equal access to employment opportunities, implementing policies that prevent harassment, and accommodating workers' special needs unless doing so causes undue hardship. While core human rights principles are consistent across Canada, specific legal provisions vary by province and territory to reflect local legislative frameworks. Compliance with these regulations helps prevent systemic inequities, supports inclusive work environments, and upholds the rights of all workers.

FEDERAL

Under the Canada Labour Code Sections 94\(1\), 95, and 247.99, and the Canadian Human Rights Act Sections 7, 10, and 14.1, employers must not interfere with union activities, discriminate against employees, or retaliate for asserting workplace rights. Employers are responsible for maintaining fair labour practices, addressing complaints, and ensuring that policies do not deprive individuals of employment opportunities based on prohibited grounds. These rules are vital to promoting respectful and equitable labour relations in the workplace.
