

Millennial's – Narcissistic Trophy Winners, or the Future of Your Company?

Whether Millennial's are narcissistic is up for debate, but whether they are the future of your company is not. The Boomers are leaving and the Millennial's are going to fill those shoes, like it or not. Although the Millennial's are often bashed as narcissistic Trophy Winners (a reference to their "everyone-wins-a-trophy" sports experiences), the fact is that Millennial's have a lot to offer. For example, they come to the workplace with more experience than previous generations. They've had internships, they've been overseas, and they've been involved in a variety of volunteer positions.

Furthermore, they are "digital natives" who can help you embrace succeeding generations of technology. One of your Millennial's is probably going to have to mentor your CEO.
