

New rules should see 'significant progress' in increasing women on boards of TSX-listed firms

Canada's stock market regulators released long-awaited rules Wednesday that will compel companies listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange to be completely transparent about female representation on their boards of directors. Though it is the most far-reaching attempt thus far to address the immense gender imbalance in Canada's boardrooms, there are no quotas, no mandated deadlines, and...