

Persuade Employees to Get a Flu Shot by Debunking Common Myths

Flu season during a pandemic makes flu vaccination more important than ever.

The flu season is a perennial headache for organizations and their HR managers. But flu season in a time of pandemic is expected to raise historical and unprecedented health, productivity and attendance challenges. The good news is that unlike COVID-19, there is a proven vaccine for the flu. The bad news is that many people decline to get it, even though it's quick, easy, widely available and free. The reason for that are the widespread myths about flu and the flu vaccine. With flu season right around the corner, you might want to post this infographic debunking some of the most common myths to persuade your own employees to get a flu shot.
